Unmasking the Faces of Lung Cancer: Radon Awareness Project

There can be no stronger advocates for radon awareness than those who have battled radon-induced lung cancer and survived. With that in mind, CARST is pleased to be launching a new public awareness campaign; Unmasking the Faces of Lung Cancer.

Each person who shares their story will help to gradually unmask the true face of lung cancer. From those who “never smoked a day in their lives”, to those for whom years of smoking combined with high radon exposure proved deadly. Victims, survivors, family members; each story becomes part of the bigger picture.

The success of this campaign depends on your involvement. If you have been affected by Lung Cancer, regardless of its source, please share your story with us, we know your experience is valuable and want to help you with sharing it. Following are some sample questions, please feel free to provide us the information that you want the public to understand about your experience with lung cancer. We would also love to have a photo of you. Please email the completed questions and photo to: info@carst.ca.

What is your lung cancer story? (How were you diagnosed, what was your treatment, how long have you been cancer free?)

What was the radon level in your home, and how long have you lived there?

Prior to being diagnosed with lung cancer, were you aware that radon was a risk?

When people find out about your battle with lung cancer, do you find they make a natural assumption as to its cause?

Have you ever smoked?

What message would you send to Canadians about radon and/or lung cancer?

What message would you send to policy makers about radon?

What province do you live currently?

- Which other provinces have you lived in?

Best method for contact:

Do you give us permission to use your photo and story for the following purposes:

- Promoting radon awareness
- Advocating for radon policy change
